Holden tries to avoid layoffs

Picture: Kelly Barnes

GM HOLDEN will move its Adelaide factory to a one-shift operation next month in response to the global downturn and believes it can avoid job cuts among its production workers.

But Holden chairman and managing director Mark Reuss refused to rule out reductions to the company's white-collar staff and warned last week that the car industry might need government cash to help it through the crisis.

'We're trying to stabilise production here for the supply base and our employees at Elizabeth', Mr Reuss said today. 'We think this will offer the best opportunity to prevent job losses.'

Mr Reuss said it was too early to calculate the financial effect on individual workers who will lose shift penalties but the move would not reduce total production at the plant.

Mr Reuss said the uncertainty had been proving difficult for the company's suppliers and workers.

He did not say how long the arrangements would last for the 3150 assembly plant workers and 2000 white-collar workers, mostly based in Victoria, who could still face cutbacks.

Pay cuts for headquarters staff were announced last month in line with edicts from Holden's parent company General Motors, which is striving to avoid bankruptcy after sharp sales declines in the US and Europe.

Holden exports, mainly to the Middle East and the US, are down as much as 80 per cent, Mr Reuss said. Meanwhile local demand for Commodores has fallen 13 per cent this year.

Sales of locally-built cars have been especially hard hit by the downturn, with demand down 28 per cent in the year to date.
